

Abstract

The present invention provides a method and device for exposing injured mammalian tissues, in a non-abrasive manner, to an effective amount of exogenous gaseous
5 nitric oxide (gNO) in order to promote healing by reducing the size, duration and severity of wounds as well as controlling the infection by reducing number of pathogens at the site and the surrounding area.